Bill McKibben recently wrote, “We are in an unprecedented and dire emergency, with the planet’s temperature increasing quickly and dangerously; if we can’t bring it under control, then it poses an existential risk to poor and vulnerable people around the planet, and then to everyone else—not to mention most of the other species, and all the generations that come after us.”

Housing

Perhaps the most powerful step that San Francisco can take to reduce greenhouse gas emissions is to build more housing. Because of San Francisco's sustainable transportation options (walking, biking, transit), mild climate, green sources of electricity, strict green building standards, and low per-capita use of water, new housing built here has a lighter environmental footprint than new housing built almost anywhere else in the state. Did you support Proposition D and oppose Proposition E in the November 2022 election? Read more on our blog about prop D and prop E.

Tell us about your past environmental work, activism, etc. (200 words max)

Through current positions with International Union of Elevator Constructors Local 8 as our Business Representative/Recording Secretary, Labor Chair Labor Chair for Northern CA Elevator Industry Joint Training & Apprenticeship Committee and delegate/trustee to the San Francisco Building and Construction Trades Council, we promote and advocate for green clean sustainable construction practices and projects. My work also includes advocating for upgrading older non-energy efficient elevators to new regenerative drive elevators. These new elevators produce power back into the electrical grid every time the elevator goes in the up direction. I believe that we need swift changes to how things are done to combat global warming. I was also raised to always leave the beach cleaner than when I got there.
