Bill McKibben recently wrote, "We are in an unprecedented and dire emergency, with the planet's temperature increasing quickly and dangerously; if we can't bring it under control, then it poses an existential risk to poor and vulnerable people around the planet, and then to everyone else—not to mention most of the other species, and all the generations that come after us."

Public Transit

Did you support immediate implementation of all phases of the Geary Boulevard Improvement Project, including the planned parking removal?

Housing

Perhaps the most powerful step that San Francisco can take to reduce greenhouse gas emissions is to build more housing. Because of San Francisco's sustainable transportation options (walking, biking, transit), mild climate, green sources of electricity, strict green building standards, and low per-capita use of water, new housing built here has a lighter environmental footprint than new housing built almost anywhere else in the state. Did you support Proposition D and oppose Proposition E in the November 2022 election? Read more on our blog about prop D and prop E.

Tell us about your past environmental work, activism, etc. (200 words max)

I have been a big supporter of public power, starting with outreach and support for Proposition H in 2008 through to supporting implementation of CleanpowerSF during my time as a legislative aide. I am also an early subscriber for CleanpowerSF. Through my role as a legislative aide at the Board of Supervisors, I have worked on a number of environmental policy issues, including the transfer of Sharp Park to the National Park Service, requiring commercial building owners to provide secure storage and access for bike storage, environmental justice and expanding urban farming in SF, and advocating for improved public transit service in southern neighborhoods, particularly to District 11. As a member of the DCCC, I've supported efforts to urge the DNC to host a climate debate, fossil fuel divestment from public assets and pension funds, and to oppose luxury housing developments over affordable housing.
