Bill McKibben recently wrote, “We are in an unprecedented and dire emergency, with the planet’s temperature increasing quickly and dangerously; if we can’t bring it under control, then it poses an existential risk to poor and vulnerable people around the planet, and then to everyone else—not to mention most of the other species, and all the generations that come after us.”

Public Transit

Did you support immediate implementation of all phases of the Geary Boulevard Improvement Project, including the planned parking removal?

☒ Yes

Increased parking meter revenue is a key part of SFMTA's plan to restore transit funding. Have you sent a quick email to Supervisors Safai and Peskin expressing your opposition to their recently withdrawn proposal to require Mayoral approval for increases in parking rates and hours? ### Housing

Perhaps the most powerful step that San Francisco can take to reduce greenhouse gas emissions is to build more housing. Because of San Francisco's sustainable transportation options (walking, biking, transit), mild climate, green sources of electricity, strict green building standards, and low per-capita use of water, new housing built here has a lighter environmental footprint than new housing built almost anywhere else in the state. Did you support Proposition D and oppose Proposition E in the November 2022 election? Read more on our blog about prop D and prop E.

It's an honor to run for the DCCC to represent our collective San Francisco communities, especially as a young, queer, person of color. I'm running because working people deserve to have a Democratic Party that fights for us. The DCCC has lots of influence in our local politics and I believe that we must expand voter registration efforts, invest in building a pipeline of grassroots community leaders to run for office, spend more time talking with community members to prioritize issues voters feel most strongly about, and fighting back the corporate interests that spend millions to buy our elections.

I'm running because San Francisco is facing many challenges, but most are not new. If elected, I'll fight to build affordable housing, address climate change, get youth engaged in politics, organize with labor unions to expand workers' rights, support universal healthcare and access to drug rehabilitation, expand public transit and make it free by 2030, invest in our public schools and educators for better academic outcomes, and envision a citywide public safety strategy centered on criminal justice reform to keep everyone safe. Together, we can create a San Francisco for everyday people, not just a city for the ultra-wealthy!
